I had a lot more fun doing the style tile than I thought I would. I think that they are a really nicely formatted way to see how things would look with different color pallets, etc. After I made my full comp, however, I realized that even though I liked my color pallet on my comp, it was kind of hard to make it work on my page. I am glad I made different style tiles because it allows me to have a quick reference of things to change if I want to change how the design looks later, rather than just tinkering around. I think both are needed to form a well thought out design. I spent about half an hour on each.